A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

I joined the LADC 26 years ago when I became a first-year associate at the firm in which I still practice today. I joined the organization at the urging of my mentors within the firm. If I'm being completely honest, I joined the LADC because that's just what young lawyers in our firm did once they were sworn in and admitted to practice. However, it didn't take me long to realize that the LADC is an organization in which my time and dollars were worth investing.

In the fall of 1999, my husband and I went on our first "big" LADC trip – an attribute for which the LADC had become known after a couple of decades in existence. Back then, there were two LADC trips per year: the annual meeting (which often was held at a location outside the U.S.), and a fall meeting (which usually was held at a stateside location). Our firm's managing partner was President of the LADC that year, so not only was attendance of our firm's associates encouraged, it was a relatively affordable trip for members to make – even those who were in the infancy of their careers. The destination – Cancun, Mexico – was enticing for numerous reasons. The setting was tropical, the meeting location offered beach set-ups & a swim-up bar (and umbrella drinks flourished at both), and golf & spa options for attendees were plentiful. Most importantly, Cancun was a place where members and their families temporarily escaped the demands and pressures of the practice of law. An added bonus was that we dined, socialized, and cut loose with people from all over the state whose acquaintance otherwise would not have been made.

In 2006, my husband and I attended another "big" meeting as a perk of my LADC membership. With the exception of its price point, this trip rivaled in many ways the Cancun trip we had taken years before. The meeting location offered a tropical climate, pools with ocean views, orchid-garnished rum drinks, and luxury spa facilities. The setting was Maui, and the Spirit of Aloha abounded. We occupied some of our spare time with charter fishing trips, Jeeping the Hana Highway, and sunset whale-watching cruises. In a word, it was paradise.

Next up for us with the LADC was Costa Rica – a destination that offered experiences like monkey mangrove tours, billfishing (and more specifically, billfish-catching!), day trips to Tortuga Island, and first-class spa treatments. The best part of this trip was that my daughter (then 4) and my mom both joined us on the trip, making it the definition of a family vacation and an experience we all still cherish to this day.

My LADC experience is not unique. Each and every member can enjoy this particular advantage of membership. You need only register to attend one of the amazing trips offered by the LADC each year, and you and your family may have the experience of a lifetime. To that end, I urge you and your families to join me in July 2024 at the LADC's annual meeting on the Island of Hawai'i as we celebrate the culmination of my term, reflect on the successes of the LADC's first 60 years of life, and toast to the future of this reputable organization. There, we will escape the rigors of life on the mainland and embrace the Spirit of Aloha.

If you cannot celebrate Independence Day with us next year in our Nation's 50th state, please consider becoming more involved in the LADC. Make no mistake; I have thoroughly enjoyed the social aspects of my LADC membership. However, my involvement long ago expanded (from merely attending CLEs and taking trips) to Board service, having occupied various roles which collectively encompass almost a decade of my career. It is that service from which I have received the greatest professional benefit, for I have been privileged to serve with motivating leaders, engaged directors, enthusiastic young lawyers, exceptional executive directors and a super event planner. I truly am honored to have been selected to lead the organization that singlehandedly has made the most indelible mark on me – both professionally and personally.

Mahalo,

Jennie Porche Pellegrin | LADC President
